prospectors are going about like modern genii with propositions for making every body immensely rich. Acquiring great wealth depends solely upon immediate use of a little ready money. Shares in the Consolidated Transalaskan Gopher company, offered at $1 each, will return dividends of $10 a minute as soon as the company gets to work. The idea is to take contracts for tunneling claims with trained gophers. Nothing is impossible, nothing chamerical. Men with seedy garments and faces bearing all to plainly the marks of hunger and want, rub elbows with portly, well fed individuals and talk glibly about millions to be had in various ways. Newspapers are full of advertisements calling for financial aid in developing Alaskan projects, offices of transportation lines are besieged by hundreds of impecunious beings who seek to make their wits pay the price of passage to the Eldorado, and on every street corner people are encountered with Klondike schemes in varying forms of development. The result is a demand for barbers. Knowledge of this led one sanguine young shaver to broach the idea of taking a party of brother workmen to the Klondike and there was considerable enthuslasm over the scheme until it was found he was trying to farm out their labor in advance at a profit, get an agent's commission on their railway and steamer tickets, and secure free transportation for himself.

Balloon exploitation is a favorite field for during spirits. At the head of one of these enterprises is Don Carlos Stevens. He is engineering the Jacobs Transportation company, with a capital stock of $150,000, one of the few schemes which have really taken the form of legal incorporation. A monster balleon is being constructed, and when this is ready Don Stevens will take it by rail and steamer to Tisklo Bay. There he will hang out his sign, "All aboard for the Klondike," and when he gets his omplement of passengers he will cut anchor rope and sul away to the gold fields. The trip, according to Don Stevens, should be made in two days, and forth between Tisklo Bay and the Louisville, Cincinnati, Washington, Klondike so long as there is any money commercial project by Thomas Arnold, in the traffic.
